Growing up in Northeast Portland

By Luke Griffin

I was born in 1975 at Besa Kaiser Hospital on N. Greely Ave in NE Portland. I grew up in Irvington, one of many inner NE neighborhoods that were home to lower and lower-middle class residents of Portland of mixed race. By the time I was a young child in the early 1980s, Portland was pretty run down. The national recession had hit the area hard, the timber industry had bottomed out, and the rest of the country still had little to no interest in our city.

But despite the economic woes and perpetual drizzle, a strong and diverse community thrived here, one that recognized the potential of a positive partnership that could be had with African-American and white community members. There was an awareness of each groups unique identity without being strangers to one another. Serious discussions of race were had but primarily people just wanted to be good friends and neighbors.

Throughout the 1980s and into the 1990s the economic stagnation led to increased poverty and with it, drugs and violence. Law enforcement seemed inclined to “help” our neighborhoods by locking up young petty criminals who were predominantly black and little positive investment came from the City. Local businesses begged for assistance to renovate, beautify, or otherwise improve but no money came, with the exception of predatory lenders. This was due in part to persistent red-lining and the City’s general disinterest in what they deemed an area of “urban blight”.

For us youth, we were proud to be from NE Portland. Here you could find historically separated groups of people coming together for barbeques, hoops, school and church. By high school, in the early 90s, many of us became aware of racial profiling by police, of the Aryan Nation presence in the Northwest, and greater signs of race inequality such as Rodney King’s tragic beating. We were angry about the ignorance, the violence, the police brutality, the economic inequality, and yet still we all saw each other as brothers.

In the late 90s, that brotherhood began to change. Urban renewal money started coming in to revitalize the worn down streets. Roads, businesses and houses were being improved. But some civic leaders were concerned that the boom would not benefit the locals who were disproportionately black, who had struggled through the hard times, who may be forced out due to the new prosperity. They met with city leaders and made recommendations that would mitigate those predicted negative impacts. Sadly, the political leaders ignored their recommendations.

By this time “Last Thursday” had begun as a small art walk. Many saw this as an improvement from just a few years previous when gangs ruled Alberta. However, at the same time many black business were closing, low-income housing units were being sold off to developers who flip the properties as higher end condos. Rents and taxes rose and soon many families of color, including many personal friends, were unwillingly forced out just when things were turning around.

For better and worse, my ‘hood was drastically changing. In many ways, things are better now: The apartments across the street from my kids’ school are no longer controlled by gang members, former crack houses are now historically renovated homes, and the main streets and parks of our neighborhoods are safe enough for evening strolls.

Unfortunately, the erosion of the black community is clearly evident as well. Between 1990 and 2010 over 60% of the African-American population left (or were forced out) N/NE Portland, never benefitting from the government funded boom. This does not place blame on those who have inadvertently displaced the people that lived here before. However, much of the economic upswing that has led to the displacement was funded by the government. Federally funded programs, regardless of intent, have had a disparate impact on N/NE Portland’s African-American community.

Moving forward, this is the history we must understand so we can remedy the ills that have already occurred and avoid similar problems in the future. Decision makers must be held accountable, policies must be proactive, and conversations in our community must come from a place of deeper understanding of systemic racism, Portland’s own troubled history, and what makes this neighborhood, my neighborhood, so special.

Feedback on TriMet Bus

By Garlynn Woodsong, Chair of the CNA Land Use & Transportation committee

Feedback Sought on Neighborhood TriMet Bus Service

This fall, TriMet will be asking for feedback and ideas for improving bus service, bus stops, and street crossings in Northwest Portland, North Portland, Downtown Portland, Southeast neighborhoods north of Division and extending east to I-205, and Northeast neighborhoods extending east to I-205. As part of its North/Central Service Enhancement Plan, TriMet will be holding a series of community conversations and conducting surveys to gather feedback from riders, community groups, businesses, and other stakeholders.

For the transit routes that are relevant to visitors to and residents of the Concordia neighborhood, we're interested in finding out what the needs are for TriMet (bus, MAX) service, including:

- a) Where are routes located?
- b) How frequent is service?
- c) Ease of access to the nearest bus stop?
- d) Other service needs?

One example of a service need in the neighborhood might be to improve access and decrease travel time from Concordia to downtown, perhaps via a new frequent service bus route to serve Alberta Street and the newly developing Vancouver/Williams corridor. Another might be to focus on ways to fix the 72 route, which often suffers from bus bunching and unpredictable schedules; for instance, could it be split into two bus routes, one serving 82nd and the other, Killingsworth?

Concordia residents interested in discussing this or any other issue related to land use and transportation, are invited to attend the next Concordia Neighborhood Association Land Use and Transportation (CNA LU&T) Committee meeting, the third Tuesday of the month, 7pm, in the Community Room in the SE corner of Kennedy School. Feedback on TriMet Bus

By Ken Forcier, Guest Opinion

It’s been hot in Concordia lately and it’s likely that you have appreciated the shade of one of our large trees. They have a microclimate of cool which they share with you on the breeze when it’s a hot day. They catch rain water, harbor wildlife and generally make you feel great about the forested neighborhood that you live in. Why then you may wonder, are they being felled left and right all over our neighborhood? I’ve watched two great, old growth Cedar trees get taken down in just this past week. Those who are perpetuating this assault on our urban forest are the developers interests as the most profitable place to build a skinny house in Portland! Sadly, their profits are at the expense of your own homes value. Good bye trees and wildlife, hello infill.

I am doing my level best to slow the chain saws and the R2.5 development by partnering with the Concordia Neighborhood Association and advocating to BDS and the City commissioners that their policy needs to change. You can do as a conscientious neighbor is join the CNA and help with this fight to save your neighborhoods ‘character.’

Welcome Back to School

By Mary Wiley

Back to school is an exciting time for students, teachers and parents. New classroom, new teacher, new friends can also be a little scary for student and getting back into the routine of the school year can be a bit of a challenge for students and parents. Here are some helpful tips for starting the year right.

1. Sleep. Children require a proper amount of sleep in order to grow to their full potential. School-age kids need 10 to 12 hours of sleep a night. Lack of sleep can cause irritable or hyper types of behavior and may make it difficult for kids to pay attention in school. It is important to have a consistent bedtime, especially on school nights.

2. Eating. Healthy eating can stabilize children’s energy, sharpen their minds, and even out their moods. As children develop, they require the healthy foods to support growing bodies. A great way to good eating habits is to start at home. Have regular family meals at a consistent time. Get kids involved in grocery shopping and preparing meals. Have healthy snacks around and easily accessible.

3. Exercise. Everyone can benefit from regular exercise. Kids who are active will: have stronger muscles and bones, leaner body and be less likely to become overweight, decrease medical issues, sleep better and have a better outlook on life.

4. Schedule. Children need predictable and consistent schedules and routines. Children will do better when they understand what is expected of them; create a calendar, talk about the schedule, outline times and tasks. Acknowledge when they are accomplishing the goals and reward them with praise.

a. Morning Routine - Getting any child up and out the door in time for school can be a trying experience. Define a routine that works for your family, assign children to tasks they can reasonably achieve and give them a warning before things happen. For instance, “We are leaving in 3 minutes. Are you ready?”

b. Extra Activities - After school and on the weekend, school children are often busy with activities that can be very rewarding and help your child succeed in life. Children who are involved in sports get higher school grades, generally healthier due to their increased activity, have an increased sense of self-worth and stronger social networks. Children involved in music activities are better adjusted, with increased academic performance, ability to think creatively, and have better memory skills.

c. Time to relax - Be careful not to overload schedule. We all need time to relax, time to wonder, time to explore our own interests. Too many activities are just as bad as too much time watching television or playing video games. Remember, life is a balance.

Every September work commuters across Portland are challenged to get out of their cars and get on their bikes. A month long friendly competition between workplaces in the tri-county area to see who can capture the greatest percentage of employees to log the most miles on their bike. At the end BTA tallies the results, gives out awards in different categories of company size and sector, and celebrate everyone’s hardwork and commitment for that month.

Here’s how it works. Anyone interested in taking the Challenge looks to see if their workplace is already registered. If it isn’t, they register themselves and their workplace team at the same time. They become the Team Captain, by default. Their coworkers register and join that workplace team.

Everyone logs their bike trips during the month of September. At the end of the month, the BTA tallies the bike trips and ranks all workplaces in size categories by the percentage of commutes achieved by bike. In early October, the BTA announces the winning companies in each category at a Big After Party.

In 2012 Portland had 12,000 people participate in the challenge and log over 1 million miles. Join them in breaking those records.

INTERNATIONAL WALK+BIKE TO SCHOOL DAY

Join over 200 schools across the state and thousands across the globe in walking and biking to school on the first Wednesday in October. This year it will be October 1st. Participating schools receive incentives and support from Bicycle Transportation Alliance Staff. The national percentage of kids biking or walking to school has declined since the 1970s, but in Portland, that number has risen from 28% in 2006 to 42% in 2012. The Walk + Bike Challenge is a friendly-competition aimed at encouraging families to walk and bike.

In Portland, 41% of kids bike and walk to school (compared to just 11% nationally).

WHY BIKES?

Bicycle transportation is at the intersection of personal, community, and global health. It epitomizes the reverberating effect that individual choices have on the world around us. Bicycling can empower us to become healthier, happier, and more in touch with the world we live in.

Biking is fun, cost-effective, and safe. We believe that the more people ride bikes, the stronger we will grow as a community. The positive effects can be hard to put into quantifiable terms, but as the bike movement grows, so does our ability to provide critical assessment and state measureable benefits.

HEALTH

Bicycle commuting burns an average of 540 calories per hour. Bike commuters report lower stress and greater feelings of freedom, relaxation, and excitement than car commuters. Biking to work reduces the stress of commuting and adds activity to your daily routine.

According to the federal government, biking for transportation can count toward the minimum 150 minutes/week of moderate-intensity aerobic activity recommended for physical health. It is also listed as the safest way to get physical activity.

Countries with the highest levels of cycling and walking generally have the lowest obesity rates.

ECONOMY

The average American household spends an entire three months’ pay on transportation.

Americans spend more on transportation than any other category except housing. On average, 18% of household expenditures are for transportation. Local businesses benefit when more customers can park bikes in what used to be a single car parking space.

By 2017, Portland, Oregon residents will have saved $64 million in health care costs thanks to bicycling. By 2040, the city will have invested $138-605 million in bicycling yet saved $386,594 million in health care costs and $143-218 million in fuel costs, a benefit-cost ratio of up to 4 to 1.

Bicycle and pedestrian infrastructure projects create up to double the jobs (11-14) of road infrastructure projects (7) per $1 million spent.

A report estimated that Portland, Oregon’s regional trail network saves the city approximately $115 million per year in healthcare costs.

Suicide Prevention Month

September is National Suicide Prevention Month. Know the warning signs and take action!

The following signs may mean someone is at risk for suicide. The risk of suicide is greater if a behavior is new or has increased and if it seems related to a painful event, loss, or change. If you or someone you know exhibits any of these signs, seek help as soon as possible by calling the Lifeline at 1-800-273-TALK (8255).

- Talking about wanting to die or to kill themselves.
- Looking for a way to kill themselves, such as searching online or buying a gun.
- Talking about feeling hopeless or having no reason to live.
- Talking about being a burden to others.
- Increasing the use of alcohol or drugs.
- Acting anxious or agitated; behaving recklessly.
- Sleeping too little or too much.
- Withdrawing or isolating themselves.
- Showing rage or talking about seeking revenge.
- Displaying extreme mood swings.

Suicide Calls Increase

The National Suicide Prevention Lifeline (800-273-TALK) and its national network, including its only Oregon affiliate, Lines for Life, answered more than 1 million calls a year, providing help, hope, support and recovery to callers in emotional distress and suicidal crisis. On Aug. 10, just one day prior to Robin Williams’ death by suicide, Lifeline answered over 3,000 calls. Within 24 hours after his death on Aug. 11, 2014, Lifeline’s call volume more than doubled. On Aug. 12, 2014, Lifeline received 7,375 calls nationwide, the highest number of calls on one given day in the history of the Lifeline. Independent evaluations of this service funded by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration have shown that callers to Lifeline’s centers typically experience significant reductions in emotional and suicidal distress. As awareness of this vital service grows, more lives are being saved.

Trained to listen and not to judge, the crisis intervention specialists establish rapport with callers and help them reconnect with their reasons for living.

Increased public awareness and actions taken towards suicide prevention is perhaps the one good thing to come out of this tragedy. The 24/7 phone number for the Lines for Life Suicide Lifeline is (800) 273-TALK (8255) and its national network, including its only Oregon affiliate, Lines for Life, answers more than 1 million calls a year, providing help, hope, support and recovery to callers in emotional distress and suicidal crisis.

Robin Williams’ Death Prompts Record Phone Calls to Suicide Line

Lines for Life’s Suicide Lifeline call volume doubles, most from concerned friends and relatives. Following Robin Williams’ death there has been a near doubling in calls to the Lines for Life Suicide Lifeline from friends and family members concerned about a loved one’s risk for suicide. This reflects the national trend this week.

“The rise in phone calls is coming mostly from those who have been concerned about another person for a while and have been prompted to act now”, said David Westbrook, former crisis line Director, now Chief Operating Officer, at Lines for Life. “This is exactly what we urge people to do – to start a conversation and take action so we can help prevent suicide.”

May you have warm words on a cold evening,
A full moon on a dark night,
And the road downhill all the way to your door.

Sidnee Snell is a textile artist who uses photo manipulation and stitching to create fabric paintings that reflect her diverse interests: lively cityscapes, quiet still life arrangements and the unexpected beauty found at the intersection where mother nature and man-made objects meet. Deborah Unger carves her figurative sculptures from basswood and then dresses them in clothes she sews. The figures generally exist with or in structures, of which houses are a reoccurring element. Her introspective dream-like images use metaphors to describe personal and relational conflicts.
